Episode 10 - Points: "Men, it's been a long war, it's been a tough war. You've fought bravely, proudly for your country. You're a special group. You've found in one another a bond, that exists only in combat, among brothers. You've shared foxholes, held each other in dire moments. You've seen death and suffered together. I'm proud to have served with each and every one of you. You all deserve long and happy lives in peace." - German General, translated by Joe Liebgott

Points is the tenth and final episode of Band of Brothers. As Easy Company moves into Austria, it's announced that the Germans have surrendered. Anyone with enough points can go back home to America. But for those who don't, they must wait in Austria until they're called to fight in Japan. Dick Winters spends a good amount of time considering having himself transferred to fight in Japan immediately. Also features The Reveal of who the interviewees at the start of each episode really are. Get your tissues ready.

We band of tropes: Artistic Licence - History: Easy Company are implied to reach the Eagle's Nest first. They were actually third - but the previous two units were given orders to move out before they could stay too long. Webster goes with Liebgott when he tracks down an SS officer in charge of the concentration camp. In reality he wasn't there. When the German colonel surrenders to Winters, he's shown being allowed to keep his weapon. In reality Winters took it. Back for the Finale: Buck Compton and Captain Sobel show up for the final sequence. Bittersweet Ending: A good amount of Easy Company men have been killed or severely injured in the war and all carry the scars of the experience. Some, like Joe Liebgott, break off all contact after the war is over. However, their efforts ultimately helped defeat Nazi Germany and many of the men go on to live long and happy lives, forever bonded by their shared experiences. Dropped a Bridge on Him: The most egregious example. Although the war is over, Janovec is killed in a road accident and Grant is shot by a drunken replacement. Grant does survive though. Earn Your Happy Ending: The ending may be bittersweet but they've earned it. Everyone Has Standards: Webster was one of the soldiers who was most pissed at the Germans in the last episode, but he refuses to kill the German they find in the cabin since they don't have any actual proof he was the one who ran a camp. Expository Hairstyle Change: Malarkey's Beard of Sorrow is gone, and he seems to be somewhat happier. Fire-Forged Friends: The speech the German general gives to his men describes them as this. Forgotten Fallen Friend: Janovec although it's justified mainly due to him being a replacement. Subverted when Winters is being interviewed about his transfer and it shows he still remembers Private Hall's death - from Episode 2. The "Fun" in "Funeral": At George Luz's funeral in 1998, over 1600 people show up. Friendship Moment: The baseball game closing the episode. Happily Married: Harry Welsh did go home and marry Kitty. Although Lewis Nixon had two divorces, his third marriage with a woman named Grace was a happy one. Hypocrite: Upon encountering Winters again, now higher ranked than he is, Captain Sobel initially snubs him by refusing to salute and has to be firmly reminded of military protocol and courtesy towards higher-ranked officers. In "Currahee", Sobel was a pedantic stickler for military protocol regarding the respect owed to him from lower-ranking men. Irony: The men rig a lottery so that Shifty Powers gets chosen to go home. On his way to the airfield, he gets into an accident and winds up spending several months in various hospitals overseas. Everyone else in the company gets home long before he does. It's Personal: Webster asks Liebgott if their task to kill the alleged SS officer is this or just Following Orders. It's confirmed when Liebgott interrogates him: Liebgott: What did you do to my people? Kleptomaniac Hero: All of Easy Company get to raid the Eagle's Nest once they make their way up to it. They take as much of Hermann Goering's wine/liquor collection as they can haul out on trucks, with Nixon having first pick. Meaningful Echo: Winters's narration at the end of Episode 2 expresses a desire to find "a peaceful corner of the world". His narration at the end of this one says that he did find it and lived there for the rest of his life. note He was alive at the time of filming but died in 2011

Mirroring Factions: When a German officer addresses his men for the last time, Liebgott translates his speech. What he says parallels exactly what Easy Company have been through, and the Americans are seen smiling at this. Plenty of Blondes: As Easy Company pass through Austria, a number of blonde farm girls are seen smiling and waving at them. Reality Is Unrealistic: Speirs saying "when you talk to an officer, you say sir" sounds like it's right out of a war movie but it's something he actually said. The Reveal: The names of the real life Easy Company vets in the interviews are revealed in the final segment. Scenery Porn: This episode features the most of it. There are rather a lot of beautiful shots of the 'Austrian' scenery, presumably to contrast against the gritty battlefield scenes that were almost Deliberately Monochrome. Screw This, I'm Outta Here!: Subverted. Winters considers transferring himself to Japan but ends up staying with Easy Company. Shirtless Scene: Winters gets two when he's swimming in the lake. Title Drop: From the real Carwood Lipton, reciting a line from Henry V. To Absent Friends: Averted in the finale. It's not said what happens to those who weren't in the baseball game scene - such as Malarkey, Guarnere, Heffron, Toye, etc. Victory Is Boring: The episode is an examination of this very trope. There are no more battles to be fought and most of the men sit around wondering what they are to do now - as they can't go home and they have to wait until they're either called to Japan or the war ends. It's possible that this is the reason Winters considers transferring himself to Japan. Seems to be the case for Speirs, who remained in the army for years. Otherwise subverted towards the official end of the war. Winters is given the option of serving in Korea but declines. Most of the men go back to peaceful lives too. What Happened to the Mouse?: Although it's said that Sgt. Grant is going to be fine, his fate is never revealed in the episode. In reality he lived until 1984, as the owner of a cigarette shop. Subverted for Malarkey, Heffron and Guarnere whose fates aren't revealed in the narration but their real selves appear in interviews. "What Now?": Ending: Implied in-universe. After Winters announces that the war is officially over, some of the men look as if they don't know how to take the news. Having spent so long in the army, they're not sure how to readjust to civilian lives. "Where Are They Now?" Epilogue: Done via a baseball game at the Sandlot and Winters narrating what happened to the Easy Company men except those who were sent home (Guarnere, Toye, Shifty), transferred (Malarkey) or didn't train at Toccoa (Heffron). Buck Compton becomes a prosecutor and is part of the trial for the murder of Robert F Kennedy. David Webster goes on to become a journalist, later writing a book about sharks. In 1961 he is lost at sea. Johnny Martin returns to the railroad before opening his own construction company. George Luz becomes a handyman. As a testament to his character, 1600 people attend his funeral in 1998. Eugene Roe goes on to be a construction contractor and dies in 1998. Frank Perconte becomes a post man. Joe Liebgott becomes a cab driver and sadly breaks off all contact with everyone else. Bull Randleman goes into the earth-moving business in Arkansas. Alton More takes Hitler's personal photo album back home and dies in a car accident in 1958. Floyd Talbert loses touch with everyone for years, but shows up to a reunion right before his death in 1981. Carwood Lipton becomes a glass-making executive. Harry Welsh returns home and marries Kitty, becoming a school administrator. Ronald Speirs is the only man to remain in the army, serving in Korea and later becoming a prison governor. He retires a Lt Colonel. Lewis Nixon is married and divorced twice before finding true love and travelling the world with a woman named Grace. He dies in 1995. Dick Winters goes on to work with Nixon until he's called back to train soldiers for Korea. He opts not to go himself and instead retires to his "peaceful corner of the world." The conclusion in this ten-part miniseries based on the experiences of Easy Company, the 506th Parachute Infantry Regiment, United States Army 101st Airborne Division, during World War II, and featuring commentary from Easy Company veterans preceding each episode. This episode begins in July of 1945 in Zell Am See, Austria, as Winters narrates that he and Nixon are now three years removed from having first joined the paratroopers. With Winters about to go on a morning swim, Nixon interrupts him with a package containing photographs of Easy Company. Together the men reminisce about their journey together and discuss the future. A meeting with Sink has made Winters consider becoming a career army man. Nixon thinks they should both head back to Nixon, New Jersey, to work for his family's company, Nixon Nitration Works. Winters takes the idea under consideration, then recalls their recent time in Bavaria, high in the Alps at Berchtesgaden. With the town serving as the Nazi Party's symbolic home, Germans were ordered to make a last stand there, forcing Easy Company to block its roads. Then, Sink orders Winters to outflank the French and be first into Berchtesgaden. There, Easy Company takes over the mostly deserted town and sets up at a luxury Nazi hotel. Winters and Welsh go to work swiping fine silverware and anything else that isn't nailed down. Then, Easy Company goes up the mountaintop to conquer the Eagle's Nest, the summer home and "crown jewel" of Hitler's empire. There, Alton More peruses - and filches - Hitler's personal photo album. Winters then announces the latest news: The German army has surrendered. Soon, Winters takes Nixon to Hermann Goring's deserted house, where he presents his friend with the man's massive liquor cellar. Nixon notes that the bottles will make for a happy V-E Day. From there, Easy Company moves out to the beautiful Austrian countryside. Later, Winters refuses to accept a German colonel's sidearm as his show of formal surrender. As the men watch films about Okinawa, Nixon discusses with Winters and Speirs how some men will have earned enough "points" to go home, but the others will have to still be ready to fight. In the Austrian countryside, Perconte, Powers, and Randleman try to hunt deer while discussing their current points situations. Later, the men learn there will be a lottery to send one soldier home from each regiment. Easy Company's winner is Powers. Afterward, Powers says goodbye to Winters, thanking him for his leadership but scared about how he will explain "all this" once he returns to Virginia. Winters's narration relates that, while shipping out, Powers got hit by a drunken soldier and suffered serious injuries. Later, Welsh tells Nixon that he has enough points to go home, but Nixon thinks he should stay around for their redeployment to the Pacific Theatre. Then, Winters and Nixon reveal that they have applied for a transfer and will soon be headed to the Pacific themselves. Later, during his transfer meeting, Winters is forced to recount his time in Europe and discuss why he wishes to head to the Pacific. Winters's transfer is not immediately granted, and he is forced to stay in Austria for the time being. Meanwhile, Liebgott pursues a suspected concentration camp commandant, against Webster's advice. Finding him, Liebgott interrogates the man and, thinking him guilty, shoots him. With the war nearly over, the American and German soldiers now fraternize, anxious to simply get home. Nevertheless, Janovec dies in a fluke car accident, ten points short of being able to return to America. Winters discusses how men are still dying, due to an overabundance of weapons, alcohol, and free time. One such victim is Charles Grant who gets shot in the head by a drunken trooper from another company. Easy Company searches for the shooter while Grant is escorted to a German hospital in the hopes of finding a brain doctor. They finally locate a German physician in the middle of the night who is able to save Grant. The replacement who shot Grant is finally located, and Speirs and the other men take their anger out on him. Despite having enough points to go home, Speirs tells Winters that he wishes to stay on as company commander. Winters discusses the various ways some Easy Company men were able to leave Austria. Malarkey gets sent on "official business" to Paris and Lipton gets a job at battalion headquarters. Even Sobel makes his return and Winters forces him to salute. Easy Company members later listen in as a German general addresses his troops, speaking of his pride in them. Ultimately, Winters decides to take Nixon up on his job offer in New Jersey. Finally, as the Japanese surrender and the war comes to its end, Winters and his men takes part in a baseball game on a field in Austria, where he details what became of all of Easy Company's soldiers. Afterward, the real "Band of Brothers" offers closing thoughts. This selection from the Alan Gerry Cable Collection has been made available by the Gerry Foundation, Inc.
